Dental treatments:
No increased risk in dental practices despite Covid-19

Dear patients,

despite the corona pandemic, there is no increased risk during your dental treatment.

- Dentists have always worked with very high standards of hygiene. Protection against infection is a daily routine in all dental practices.
- Already before the appearance of the corona virus, all treatments were carried out with mouth and nose protection as well as gloves. Additionally, each practice has at its disposal sterilization equipment for the disinfection of the used instruments. The working area is thoroughly disinfected after each treatment, using disinfectants that also kill the corona virus.
- Compliance with the relevant requirements of the Robert Koch Institute, the Association of Dentists of Bavaria and the Bavarian Association of Statutory Health Insurance Dentists is monitored by the supervisory authorities and the dental bodies themselves and is part of the quality management in every dental practice.
- Medical mouth-nose protection effectively prevents the corona virus from being passed on to the patient.
- The dental practices ensure that the waiting time of the patients is as short as possible, and that safety distance are respected in the waiting room.
- Patients can therefore receive all necessary treatments without having to be afraid of a corona infection. There is no increased risk of infection in dental practices.

Yours,
